What could be more divine than catching the scent of this white flowering gardenia jasminoides bonsai? It's from the rubiaceae family of gardenia and is called kushinashi in Japanese. The shrub has continuously gleaming green foliage and the flower colour varies from cream to ivory to slightly pink, sending off a pungent aroma around the garden. It blooms steadily from the middle of June through to the end of July. Potted gardenias like to be kept in cold greenhouses or orangeries, but most of all it's important to protect them from frost during winter.
